President’s Report
by Marysa Navarro
Dartmouth College
marysa.navarro@dartmouth.edu

I am delighted to report that we finally have a permanent Executive Director. The search committee completed its task as planned by the end of January and presented its recommendation to the Executive Council the following month. The search committee recommended that Milagros Pereyra Rojas be appointed Executive Director of LASA. The motion was unanimously adopted.

Milagros or “Mili” was born in Lima, Peru. She joined the LASA Secretariat in July 2000 as Assistant Director for Information Systems and Communication. She has a Masters in Management and Technology. Last year, when the first search for an Executive Director failed she was asked to serve as Interim Director, which meant initiating several important changes in the day to day operations of the Secretariat and the organization of our international congresses, while preparing a new congress. She has done an excellent job, carefully building on the extraordinary accomplishments of her predecessor Reid Reading. The Executive Council approved her appointment with great enthusiasm.

The Executive Council met in the Hotel Riviera of Las Vegas where our next International Congress will take place. By the way, this is a special congress, our XXVth !! We had a full agenda that included two items of particular interests to those who will plan to attend our next congress.

The Executive Council was concerned about reports of visa problems for conference participants at our Dallas meeting and the new restrictions adopted for traveling to the United States. It was decided that the Executive Council should try to facilitate the process for conference participants from everywhere outside the United States. Beginning with our conference in Las Vegas, the Secretariat will send a set of two different letters to conference attendees. One will be the usual acceptance letter with instructions for individual participants. The second letter will be an official letter which could be presented to the United States Consulate should it be required or the participants’ institutions. The Secretariat is prepared to send two originals of the official letter. By the time you read this in the Forum, you will hopefully have received the two letters.

Everyone who went to the business meeting remembers our chaotic and most unsatisfactory handling of our resolution dealing with the war in Iraq and the two resolutions on Cuba. It was generally agreed that the changes concerning the discussion of resolutions at business meetings were definitely an improvement but they still left many people unhappy. The Executive Council was urged to try again and implement additional changes. We complied and we decided to modify the present rules. Therefore, beginning with our congress in Las Vegas, friendly amendments to resolutions may be presented at the LASA business meetings. If accepted by a duly empowered person (i.e. one or more signatories of the resolution) present at the meeting, the resolution thus amended, will be mailed for a vote to the membership. If the amendments are not accepted, the resolution will be mailed for a vote in its original form. Like all amendments to our By-laws this decision will be sent to the membership for approval or rejection. See page 32 of this issue of the LASA Forum.

IMPORTANT: PLEASE READ CAREFULLY

Some LASA members have written the Secretariat expressing their deep concern about the recent ruling issued by the Office of Foreign Assets Control affecting the publication in the United States of edited versions of materials originally written in countries such as the Balkans, Burma, Cuba, Iran, Iraq, Liberia, Libya, North Korea, Sudan, and Zimbabwe, that is to say countries under a U.S. trade embargo. Manuscripts from embargoed countries cannot be published in the United States if they have been edited, and that includes simple editing, correcting grammar or spelling. Publishers wishing to publish edited materials from embargoed countries may apply for a license from the Office of Foreign Assets Control. Violators of the ruling can be subject to fines of $500,000 and 10 years imprisonment. The Executive Council and the Committee on Academic Freedom and Human Rights are trying to learn more about the ruling. We are also in contact with other professional associations in order to prepare a joint statement. We have learned that the Association of American University Presses and the Association of American Publishers are planning to file a suit. In the meantime, I would like to ask that individuals and section members of LASA refrain from publishing any such materials in their newsletters or their websites. Thank you very much for your cooperation in this matter. Marysa Navarro, President.
Carlos Mesa’s Challenges in Bolivia: Will He Succeed Against Overwhelming Odds?
by Eduardo Gamarra

“Si me sirvo de ustedes me van a echar de una patada.”
President Carlos Mesa Gisbert October 20, 2004 speech to campesino assembly at Plaza San Francisco in La Paz

Carlos Mesa was sworn in on October 17, 2003, as president of Bolivia in a last ditch effort to avert the complete collapse of that country’s deeply troubled democracy. His arrival on the scene saved constitutional democracy and his four months in office signaled a dramatic change in ruling style. The question is whether Mesa will succeed in saving democracy or whether he too will succumb against overwhelming odds. So far, Mesa has prevailed but it is still too early to predict the longevity of his tenure.

During his nearly five months in office, Mesa adopted a ruling style that aims to build on his impeccable credentials as an anti-corruption crusader first from the pulpit of his television station and then during his brief tenure as vice president. President Mesa, who has already submitted an economic strategy, spent his first one hundred days in office attempting to placate the indigenous groups, neighborhood associations, labor unions, and middle class sectors that toppled Gonzalo Sanchez de Lozada, one of Bolivia’s most significant leaders of the twentieth century.

Mesa’s challenges are indeed profound, far greater than making peace with the looters and those who shot at them during the October 2003 bloodbath. They are the same challenges that are responsible for the failure of his predecessor Sanchez de Lozada who, after being ousted, sits in Washington pondering the factors that resulted in his demise. In the current Bolivian scene, it has become fashionable to blame the former president for all of Bolivia’s ills. When the dust settles, however, it will become clear that he could not tame the forces that he unleashed with the profound reforms that he introduced between 1993 and 1997 during his first term as president.

In some measure Mesa has become a populist, promising to deliver things that are not only impractical but impossible in the context of the country’s worst ever economic crisis. Mesa adopted a dangerous style of promising first and then warning all that Bolivia is bankrupt and cannot meet any of its obligations. In barely four months he has modified the Constitution as he promised in October and has essentially given in to the demands that he once fervently opposed. Such is the case with measures such as: the convocation of a Constituent Assembly; the holding of a referendum to decide if Bolivia will export natural gas; and, the modification of the hydrocarbons law that established the rules for foreign direct investment.

Mesa’s plan aims mainly to resolve the immediate political issues. His principal task is to achieve a nation saving social pact among disparate movements, political parties, and regional groups each with its own laundry list of impossible demands. The convocation of a Constituent Assembly, for example, is a cosmetic issue that will not address the immediacy of the country’s deeply rooted problems, but which has the potential of making Bolivia even more ungovernable. The country’s principal analysts and political leaders have convinced Bolivians that a Constituent Assembly is a fundamental step toward saving the country. A simple reading of the experience of Andean countries with Constituent Assemblies would reveal that far from solving problems, they tend to exacerbate them. Given Bolivia’s extreme problems of ethnic, racial and regional nature, the outcome of such an assembly will establish a new institutional architecture that will be interesting to study but likely to exacerbate the country’s problems.

Mesa’s greatest challenge is to address Bolivia’s extreme social exclusion, which has kept the indigenous, women, the aged, and children in sub-Saharan poverty. This is a permanent condition that Mesa will not even begin to address. Extreme social exclusion is responsible also, for the permanent presence of a highly mobilized and angry civil society, which refuses to wait for governments to deliver electoral promises. Mesa will soon realize that controlling a hyper-mobilized society, whose leaders do not believe in representative democracy, will require more than words to address.

He will also soon realize that Bolivia’s principal problem is the weakness of the State and its lack of legitimacy to enforce even simple policy decisions. Institutional weakness to carry out even the most basic tasks has hampered every democratic ruler since 1982, and the attempts to construct stable institutions failed dramatically despite the progress made in the last decade. In the 1990s, Bolivia was a remarkable showcase of “pacted democracy,” where political parties in Congress elected minority presidents and allowed the imposition of structural adjustment measures and profound reforms such as the Popular Participation Law, the capitalization of state enterprises, and others. The political pacts that were enough to insure smooth executive legislative relations, however, were not enough to control the streets which, since at least the Water Wars of April 2000, were firmly in the hands of social movements such as the cocaleros, indigenous groups, and so called “coordinadoras” that brought together disparate social movements into a coherent anti-government front.

This inevitable split between the formality of the electoral, political party, legislative agenda and the reality of street level mobilization accounts largely for the turmoil in Bolivia. After fifteen years of increasingly clientelistic political pacts, the party system demonstrated its incapacity to address the insurmountable problems of social exclusion. It is incorrect, nevertheless to claim that the party system did nothing; to the contrary the reforms of the 1990s are evidence that much was done. The paradox may be that the reforms themselves unleashed the forces that are currently unfettered in Bolivia.

Nonetheless, it has become good politics in the country to blame the parties and those who ran the country for the last fifteen years for all that is wrong. Predictably Mesa asked political parties to move out the way while he attempts to govern without them. In this manner he argues, political parties will be able to rescue themselves. It may be too late, as in other Andean countries all political institutions are mortally wounded and may not recover in time to avert the inevitability of some type of direct unmediated democracy. Mesa has discovered in his brief tenure as president that despite the crisis, he needs them. Otherwise he is only a prisoner of the same groups that got rid of Sanchez de Lozada and have only a tenuous commitment to the democracy Mesa aims to preserve.

While he may not be able to address social exclusion, Mesa must deal with the immediacy of the profound economic crisis. Caused mainly by the succession of international crises and the mismanagement by the previous Banzer, Quiroga and Sanchez de Lozada administrations, the Bolivian economic crisis is characterized by an enormous fiscal deficit. The Sanchez de Lozada government obtained some reprieve through agreements with the Paris Club and the IMF, but Mesa will have to continuously renegotiate with international financial institutions.

In early February 2004, Mesa announced his economic plan, which embodies a strange combination of measures aimed to placate Evo Morales and his MAS party, such as the new hydrocarbons law that levies taxes on the multinational investors who capitalized on the industry and discovered Bolivia’s amazing natural gas wealth. The economic plan is also a return to the old notion that only the State can own the country’s natural resources. While this is good politics in the current context, in the long run it is unlikely that foreign investors will flock to Bolivia. Without fresh capital, few give Bolivia a chance to emerge from the crisis and simultaneously achieve the goal of “industrializing natural gas” without foreign intervention.

The issue of exporting natural gas will be the sole question on a referendum to be held sometime in 2004. While the principal problem at the moment is the phrasing of the question, most assume that it will ask simply if the country’s natural gas should be exported. Mesa has given in to pressures to host a national rather than a departmental referendum to avoid splitting the country between the regions where gas is produced in the lowland departments of Santa Cruz and Tarija and the highland areas where the political base of those groups opposed to the sale of gas rests. No matter what the outcome, the referendum is likely to stir regional passions to the extent that a slim possibility still exists that the hydrocarbon producing departments may opt out of Bolivia.

As if these were not enough Carlos Mesa faces even greater challenges: addressing the coca-cocaine industry, while attempting to keep the likes of Evo Morales and George W. Bush at bay; enforcing land reform, while risking further conflict with wealthy landowners and landless peasants; dealing with Bolivia’s exploding urban crime, while simultaneously disciplining corrupt and beleaguered security forces. Despite the magnitude of these challenges, Mesa’s popularity ratings have soared. In February he enjoyed favorable ratings of 78 percent, making him the most popular president in the Andes with a rate of support even higher than that of Colombia’s Alvaro Uribe. The contrast with Sanchez de Lozada is even more telling of where he sits. When Sanchez de Lozada left office his support rate barely reached 10 percent.

Mesa now has the confidence to believe that he will complete his constitutional term in August 2007. Mesa popularity is rooted in three factors. First, he has given in to the demands for a Constituent Assembly, referendum, and the modification of the hydrocarbons law. Second, he remains as the only hope that Bolivia’s mestizo and white middle and upper classes have to forestall the inevitability of indigenous rule. And third, he has brought all Bolivians together through his international crusade to gain a sovereign access to the ocean. How long this precarious balance will last is anyone’s guess. If he fails, however, the catastrophic scenarios forecast last year will again dominate the headlines.

For Mesa to remain in office will require significant international cooperation if he does not want to become an even shorter-lived president than his predecessor. He is banking on the idea that the remarkable level of international media attention to recent turmoil can be translated into concrete assistance that will help this journalist turned politician guide his country out of desperate straits.

With less than two years remaining in his five-year term, Haitian President Jean Bertrand Aristide left office, a move which will leave many wondering whether France and the United States should have pressured him to resign. In pragmatic terms, it was the easiest choice, after the U.S. was unable to persuade the nonviolent opposition “Democratic Platform” to agree to a French-Canadian-US proposal, based on an earlier one from the Caribbean Community (CARICOM), to reduce presidential power. Aristide had accepted both plan, despite his lack of credibility among diplomats, Haitians with class hatred, and the newly mobilized, multi-class non-violent opposition.

Aristide’s theft of the May 2000 Senate election; his paramilitary attacks on opposition figures on December 17, 2001, which followed an unsolved attack on the presidential palace; and his subsequent failure to keep his promises and demobilize and disarm his paramilitary cliques, left him with no public supports outside of those sponsored by the regime. In effect, Aristide continued his traditional practices of force, especially military force, to preserve his political power instead of building a legitimate criminal justice system. Once again, law was not the basis of authority, and official criminality blossomed, this time based on his putative base in favor of the mass peasantry.

An additional source of power, rooted in the Army which Aristide had abolished in December 1994, came from the sudden pressure from an armed uprising in February 2004, comprised of several groups of notorious killers, some of whom Aristide had originally sanctioned and armed, including the “Cannibal Army,” Aristide was left to rely on the third and final base of power, his paramilitary forces and the government patronage and drug trafficking that financed them. Aristide’s paramilitary forces might well have been able to defend the capital from the armed rebellion, though in the end he was unwilling or unable to resist the coup that resulted from his US-induced resignation.

The U.S.-funded, non-violent opposition, previously called the Group of 184 since November 2002, did not trust Aristide and rejected the CARICOM plan. Its real grassroots support has not been demonstrated, but its protests have been unprecedented in size and course and has elicited cross-class and sectoral representation. The U.S. decided not to blame the opposition for its refusal, but declared on February 28, 2004, a week after broaching the CARICOM proposal, that the crisis was largely of Aristide’s own making. Aristide, once a charismatic priest with an inchoate progressive ideology, faced his second coup. The U.S., which had sent fifty Marines to guard the U.S. Embassy and presumably Aristide, withdrew its protection of him and he submitted his resignation, entering a U.S.-hired airplane headed first to Antigua and then to the Central African Republic, before returning to Jamaica a week later (at the time of writing).

Whether Aristide was misled or deliberately coerced into resignation, is not known, though he probably was not kidnapped by the U.S. as he claims. Another question, however, is why the US chose to punish Aristide and not the opposition, though it had received $2 million in U.S. support in the last fiscal year (compared with the $800,000 which the U.S. provided the Venezuelan opposition) from the U.S. National Endowment for Democracy (NED) in order to support a stronger civil society. (Past NED support was given to Jean Jacques Honorat, a leading human rights monitor, who had also received the human rights award from the American Bar Association, just before he was named the first Prime Minister of the 1991-1994 coup government.)

For critics including myself, the opposition should have tried to work with the lawless Aristide presidency to build legal and constitutional processes and institutions, rather than ending an elected president’s term prematurely with armed opposition power.

Another unexercised option, to bring Aristide before Haiti’s Supreme Justice Tribunal, a mechanism included in the 1987 Constitution to deal with officials suspected of gross mischief, was not exercised because several of the institutions needed to participate in this Tribunal were non-existent. Instead of reconfiguring coalition rule through more or less voluntary negotiations, Aristide’s departure represents another intrusion of the U.S. as the country’s power-broker, only this time largely against democratic processes. Defenders of the decision to ease Aristide out argue that he was so authoritarian that democratization was not possible with him present. For the Democratic Platform, Aristide’s exit with two years left in his five-year term would not amount to what Aristide termed the thirty-third “coup” but it would be the fresh start Haiti needs without the sultan that personified government power, while on paramilitary thugs. In Haitian history, people have more often than not, opted for the “clean sweep” alternative, letting the embattled presidents go into exile, rather than be tried for his alleged misdeeds.

The events behind Aristide’s departure, surprisingly, began like the Haitian Revolution, which ended 200 years ago. The armed effort started in the northeast city of Gonaïves, where the Cannibal Army joined up with insurgents in the mountains and headed toward the capital. The Cannibal Army’s initial success in gaining military control of the city and repelling an invasion from special forces of new Haitian National Police, led other insurgents to join forces, not unlike some of the early successes two centuries ago under Touissant L’Ouverture. The difference, of course, was that today’s “revolutionaries” came from the Dominican Republic, consisted of forces partly led by a terrorist from the FRAPH terror organization during the coup government of 1991-1994, Louis-Jodel Chamblain. He was the “bad cop,” who was convicted in absentia for a major atrocity, Rabateau, located near Gonaïves and possibly connected to the Cannibal Army. His superior, the more polished "good cop," Guy Philippe, probably organized and funded the armed rebellion from illicit trafficking. The OAS human rights organization investigated Philippe, from the time he was Precinct chief of Delmas (Commissaire), in the late 1990s. The human rights record of that commissariat was poor. Subsequently, he was the commissaire divisionnaire in the country’s second largest city, Cap Haitien, from which he had fled to the neighboring country after allegedly plotting a coup against Aristide in 2001.

With Aristide gone, and at the time of writing, the armed wing of opposition is hoping to integrate into the new national police or a reinstated army, despite that institution’s crimes against humanity during the 1991-94 coup regime. An ominous sign for developing the rule of law in Haiti was the very public embrace of the armed rebels in Gonaïves during the weekend of March 20, 2004 by transitional Prime Minister Gerard Latortue, calling them “freedom fighters.” When U.S. President Ronald Reagan deemed the Contras the same term, he was not referring to a group whose leaders were already convicted of crimes against humanity and directly implicated in drug trafficking. Instead of disarming and arresting them, the rebels may be granted amnesty and integrated into the police or a reinstated army, which Aristide had abolished. The larger non-violent wing of the opposition needs to put aside differences and do what’s best for the country. Hopefully, the various groups former supporting or opposing Aristide will coalesce around constitutional rule and not fall in the practicality trap of relying on Haiti’s traditional bases of power and the mechanism of force, rather than law. The non-violent opposition to Aristide, which has the primary influence under the new government of newly named Prime Minister Gérard Latortue, has a few unsavory characters, including major economic elites and perhaps some of those rumored to fund the 1991 coup against Aristide. The majority, including its former leader André Apaid, had denounced the 1991 coup and had protested for Aristide’s peaceful resignation. Most in this group sound enlightened, but their intransigence with Aristide must be transformed into practicality in politicians focused on institution-building including with elements of Aristide’s electoral authoritarian regime.

Of course, Haiti needs a sustained and coordinated commitment over at least a decade toward peace building, rather than two quick years in and out with the current 180,000 foreign troops primarily from the U.S., France and Canada. This will require a major commitment from the international community, which had eschewed another intervention and had no advanced plans for another round of holding Haiti in receivership. From 1994-1996, the U.N.-sanctioned, U.S. invasion, the U.S., Canada and France helped to establish a new national police force, as well as to establish a foreign human rights monitoring mission. However, the effort in education, health and justice reform was far less extensive. Foreign aid to the Haitian predatory state has been suspended since Aristide’s February 7, 2001 inauguration, and for most of the time since the disputed Senate election of April 1997, the last time Haiti had a functioning, legitimate government. Since then, extensive amounts of foreign aid has continued to the NGO sector, following a practice established in the early 1980s under Jean Claude Duvalier. This has reinforced the Haitian predatory state, rather than building a state of law. The lone exception was the support in the middle-1990s to the new Haitian national police, which Aristide converted into a corrupt praetorian guard after the decline in U.S. involvement in 1997. Thus, Haiti was left to the devices of reinstated President Aristide, having decided that the only way to avoid another coup was to rely on the thugs that most Haitian leaders had utilized in the past.

Even before the March 2004 occupation began, already one out of eight Haitians received daily food aid, and forty percent received it periodically. The U.S. has also been spending billions preventing the "huddled masses" from coming into the U.S. Haitians, despite the generally admirable record as immigrants, have been subjected to more exclusionary measures than any other country. The U.S. Coast Guard still captures Haitian boat people, even inside Haitian territorial waters. This continues even though President Aristide has formerly denounced the Reagan-Duvalier agreement of two decades ago permitting the interdiction of boat people. The U.S. Supreme Court has also concluded that the International Refugee Convention, which forbids the return of refugees fearing persecution to their countries, is not enforceable outside the U.S. territorial seas, under the legal theory of "non-executability" of treaties without enabling legislation. However, there are still limits to what the U.S. Coast Guard can accomplish. The current transitional crisis may not establish a legitimate government committed to transforming Haiti’s state into semi-functionality and legitimacy. Numerous armed urban gang are still controlling their neighborhoods, despite unprecedented, announced US Marine plans to disarm them. They remain primarily interested in continuing their drugs and arms trafficking. The proliferation of private militia since the Duvalier dictatorship that came to power in 1957 can only stop if the Haitian state becomes functional, instead of concentrating paramilitary and police power around the person of the president.

Paramilitary forces today are a prime source of regime instability. It was Duvalier’s Ton Ton Macoute, who continued to perpetrate atrocities after they were disbanded with the 1986 end of the 29-year Duvalier dictatorship. The 1987 elections and the 1988 St. Jean Bosco church massacres, for example, were perpetrated by ex-Macoutes. The 1991-1994 coup regime decision to keep power primarily through attaches and other freelance killers. Finally, President Aristide has also clearly decided, in more subtle ways, to rely on human rights violations by the many decentralized paramilitaries which have emerged throughout the country, given that the Haitian National Police could not overtly practice mass repression. What is new and unique now is that paramilitary forces are pervasive both in favor and against the government, with many available to the highest bidder or the side that allows them to operate with impunity, especially for drug trafficking.

Aristide’s Machiavellian plan was to secure political power through extralegal means, rather than to concentrate on legal institutionalization. Aristide permitted private militia to be established or reconfigured. Arms became even more widely available, used for assassinations but also for drug-related crime.
Haiti needs, above all else, to demobilize the paramilitary militia, greatly strengthen and valorize the National Police, and establish a monitoring capability to prevent further violent human rights violations. All these developments, in turn, require the patient nurturing of nascent democratic institutions, which have steadily eroded since the international community started encouraging elections in 1987. Whoever rules Haiti, given its lack of institutions, particularly legal ones, must also decide whether to attempt to rule, in the face of an armed disloyal opposition. Armed elements in the violent underclass, formerly supporting Aristide, have already proven willing to take on the U.S. Marine occupiers, something that elements from the 1991-1994 coup regime was never willing to attempt.

The sine qua non for the international effort at nation building is to condition all foreign aid and multilateral lending on the demobilization of all private and unofficial militia with the presence of a decade-long multilateral mission sanctioned from the start. The U.S., France, Germany, and Canada, historically the largest foreign supporters of this failed state on the U.S. doorstep, focus on state-building, especially in the health, education and justice system. The UN does not have to manage the country for several years, as currently in Afghanistan. Yet, it does need the Bosnian type of civilian high commissioner, currently Paddy Ashdown, who emulates the heavy hand of the Raj, but makes hard decisions until Haitians have the institutions resulting from historic compromises and pacts necessary to build democratic institutions. Furthermore, Haiti’s isolation from the rest of Latin America should be fostered, perhaps by extending cooperation with CARICOM, the mostly English-speaking states which generally have achieved greater democratic standards than most OAS member states.

ON LASA 2004

A Note from the LASA2004 Program Chair

by Kristin Ruggiero
University of Wisconsin
ruggiero@uwm.edu

The staff at the Secretariat and I were busy in February and March reviewing the evaluations by Track Chairs of individual paper and session proposals, and scheduling them into time slots for the 2004 Congress. By the time the Spring Forum is published, the notification messages with further instructions will have gone out and people will be making travel plans.

After visiting the site of our next Congress, it is clear that Las Vegas will definitely be a different venue for LASA, and one that will present some interesting opportunities. After we became accustomed to the glitz, it began to grow on some of us that Las Vegas was in some way an important part of U.S. culture. The city doesn’t seem to take itself too seriously, and enjoys displaying its history with a sense of fantasy and appreciation for what is unique about Las Vegas. Take for example the Nevada State Museum’s “Cool Stuff From the Back Room” exhibit, which features a seven-pound hot pink gown and sanitation kit from the Sands Hotel’s bomb shelter. Or the museum’s “Neon Unplugged: Signs from the Boneyard” exhibit of neon letters and signs from Las Vegas hotels, motels, casinos, and businesses.

The local arrangements committee is being chaired by John Tuman, Professor of Political Science at the University of Nevada, Las Vegas. John has put together a fine team of people to help with the Congress, including Professors Thomas Wright (History, UNLV), Doug Unger (English, UNLV), and Sondra Cosgrove (History, Community College of Southern Nevada). In addition, John has arranged for our welcome reception to be held at UNLV’s Marjorie Barrick Museum of Natural History, which is surrounded by a beautiful xeriscape desert garden. William Beetzley, Professor of History at the University of Arizona, has offered to recruit students from his university to help with the many tasks of Congress organization. The Summer Forum will contain more details about the Congress.

For now, I would just like to thank all who submitted proposals for the Congress and the Track Chairs who have helped so much to provide us with what promises to be a very interesting selection of sessions. Also thanks are due to the Section Chairs who worked hard to arrange sessions from their respective groups. And finally, thanks to the staff at the Secretariat for the energy, creativity, and good humor which they have brought to this process.

CALLING ALL MEMBERS

NOMINATING COMMITTEE SLATE

The LASA Nominating Committee presents the following slate of candidates for vice president and members of the Executive Council (EC). The winning candidate for vice president will serve in that capacity from November 1, 2004, to March 31, 2006 and as president from April 1, 2006 until September 30, 2007. The three winning candidates for EC membership will serve a three-year term beginning November 1, 2004.

Nominees for Vice President:
Charles R. Hale
David Scott Palmer

Nominees for Executive Council:
Jose Antonio Aguilar
Elizabeth Jelin
Brooke Larson
Maria Rosa Olivera-Williams
Phillip Oxhorn
Lynn Stephen

A statement by each candidate follows the biographic entry.

THE CANDIDATES

Charles R. Hale teaches Anthropology and Latin American Studies at the University of Texas at Austin. He is the author of Resistance and Contradiction: Miskitu Indians and the Nicaraguan State, 1894-1987 (Stanford), and “Más que un indio”: Mayas, Ladinos and the Remaking of Racial Hierarchy in Highland Guatemala, under contract with the School of American Research Press. He is co-editor of Racismo en Guatemala: Ariendo Debate sobre un Tema Tabú (with Clara Arenas and Gustavo Palma) and Memorias del Mestizaje: Cultura y Política en Centroamérica 1920-presente (with Jeffrey Gould and Dario Eurache). His essays on race, ethnicity, identity politics, consciousness and resistance, and ideologies of state-nation building appear in numerous edited volumes and journals, including Current Anthropology, Critique of Anthropology, Journal of Latin American Anthropology, Annual Reviews of Anthropology, Human Organization, Wani, and Journal of Latin American Studies. During the 1980s, Hale worked in Nicaragua as a staff researcher with the Centro de Investigación y Documentación de la Costa Atlántica (CIDCA), out of which grew a long-term commitment to carrying out collaborative research. The two edited volumes are a product of such work with Central American colleagues. Most recently, these same commitments have led Hale to become involved in research on the indigenous and afro-descendant community struggles for rights to land and resources in Central America. He currently is co-PI (with Edmund T. Gordon) of a three year project, supported by Ford Foundation-Mexico, devoted to research and practical work on these issues. Hale has worked extensively with Social Science Research Council (SSRC). He served on the SSRC-MacArthur Committee for International Peace and Security (1997-2003); he is preparing an edited volume that grows out of this Committee work, tentatively titled, Engaging Contradictions: Theory and Practice of Activist Scholarship. Hale also is a member of the SSRC Regional Advisory Panel (RAP) for Latin America, and currently is actively involved in two RAP-sponsored research projects. He has received research funding from the MacArthur Foundation, the National Endowment for the Humanities, the Ford Foundation, and the H.F. Guggenheim Foundation. At the University of Texas, Hale served for four years as the Associate Director of the Teresa Lozano Long Institute of Latin American Studies (2000-2003), and currently is Co-PI (with Richard Flores) of the Rockefeller-funded Postdoctoral Residency Program for “Race, Rights, and Resources in the Americas.” He coordinates a network for research on social policy related to indigenous peoples, sponsored by the UT-affiliated Center for Latin American Social Policy (CLASPO). He served as board member for the Centro de Investigaciones Regionales de Mesoamerica, CIRMA (1997-2003), and has worked extensively with both CIRMA and the Asociación para el Avance de las Ciencias Sociales en Guatemala (AVANCOS) on various collaborative research endeavors. Hale has served LASA in a number of capacities, including a term on the Executive Council and as Treasurer of the Association (1994-97), on the Nominations Committee (1997-98) and Program Chair for the “Social Justice and Human Rights” track of LASA2003. He participated in the creation of the LASA-OXFAM Martin Dishin Award for Activist Scholarship, and chaired the selection committee for that Award (2000). Most recently, he served as LASA representative to a Delegation charged with monitoring human rights violations against scholars and intellectuals in Guatemala. A report on the Delegation’s work can be found in the LASA Bulletin (2003).

Hale Statement

LASA must continue to play a forceful role, as an advocate for unencumbered intellectual exchange across national boundaries, and for critical scholarship related to the US role in Latin America and the world. When these basic freedoms are in danger of being curtailed in the name of anti-terrorist policies, LASA can be an effective voice of opposition. Here also I favor a proactive stance: to show how the scholarship LASA supports makes a positive, indeed indispensable, contribution to the broadly held goals of forging safer, more comprehending, and more just relations among peoples of our hemisphere. In addition to these pressing matters of institutional integrity, I would pursue two objectives during my presidency. First, each President should make at least one durable contribution to organizational strengthening of our Association. LASA’s successful growth has created logistical and substantive problems in our Congresses that call out for attention: how to balance the democratic, participatory and pluralist character of the Congress, with the need for an additional increment of rigor in the selection of sessions, and the organization of the program? Any initiative of internal reform requires careful study and broad consultation, but I believe we must act, to confront growing irritation among many LASA members, still mild, but with potentially corrosive consequences. My second objective would be to strengthen our central mission of trans-regional research collaboration and scholarly exchange. LASA is well positioned to launch a major initiative to raise new endowment funds, in support of collaborative research endeavors between U.S. and Latin America-based scholars and/or activist intellectuals. Building on our experience with the “special projects,” funded by the Ford Foundation, this initiative would have a three-fold rationale: scholarly (yielding innovative research outcomes), financial (a hedge against shrinking funds for such work), and political (the crucial importance of collaborative research to inter-American understanding). I would strive to leave the Association in 2007 with this plan funded and ready to function. Finally, I would take inspiration and guidance from the hard work of preceding officers and of the Secretariat, which have left LASA so sound and vibrant. In times when “conservative” often signals regressive and mean-spirited inclinations, it is an exciting prospect to serve an organization with so many progressive achievements, and fine traditions, which are crucial to conserve.

David Scott Palmer (B.A. Dartmouth, M.A. Stanford, Ph.D. Cornell) has been Professor of International Relations and Professor of Political Science at Boston University since 1988, where he has also served as Founding Director of the Latin American Studies Program and Chair of the Department of Political Science. During these years, he has held visiting professorships at several academic institutions, including the Universidad de Salamanca, the Universidad de Chile, the Universidad de Belgrano (Argentina), FLACSO Ecuador, and FLACSO Costa Rica; he also had a Fulbright Senior Research/Lectureship at the Universidad Nacional de San Cristóbal de Huamanga (UNSch) and was a Visiting Scholar at the Inter-American Dialogue. Before joining the BU faculty, he taught at the Foreign Service Institute (FSI) of the U.S. Department of State as Chair for Latin American and Caribbean Studies in the School of Area Studies. This time in Washington included several lectureships and visiting professorships, among them the School of Advanced International Studies of Johns Hopkins, Georgetown, George Washington, and Princeton. Prior to FSI, he spent four years as Instructor and Assistant Professor at Bowdoin. Between college and graduate school, he studied for a year at the Escuela de Ciencias Politicas y Administrativas at the University of Chile and attended summer school at the Universidad de la Banda Oriental in Uruguay. And between M.A. and Ph.D. studies, he was a Peace Corps Volunteer in Ayacucho, Peru, where he taught English and social sciences at the Universidad Nacional de San Cristóbal de Huamanga and directed a reforestation project in three indigenous communities, among other responsibilities. Over the years, his research interests relating to Latin America have included authoritarianism and military regimes, democratization and its challenges, guerrilla movements, drug production and trafficking, border disputes, and U.S.-L.A. relations. His most important publications include the following:
10. “‘Reinventing’ Democracy in Peru,” with Carmen Rosa Balbi, Current History 100: 643 (February 2001)
He has also been involved in a variety of professional activities at various times. These include serving as an elections monitor for the Organization of American States in Peru in 1995 and 2000, as a project reviewer for the United Nations Development Program in 1989, as a consultant for USAID in Nepal in 2002 and 2003, as a member of the Academic Reserve for the Andean Countries for the National Intelligence Council in 2003 and 2004, as an expert witness for asylum cases from Peru before the Immigration and Naturalization Service Courts beginning in 1994, and as a member of the academic team selected by the Department of State to brief ambassador-nominees to Peru on various occasions over the past twenty years.

Palmer Statement

Over the past forty-eight years, LASA has emerged as the preeminent international organization of scholars and practitioners concerned with Latin America and the Caribbean. It has been my privilege to have been able to participate in many LASA activities since becoming a member in 1970 and a charter Life Member in 1998. These include roles as paper presenter, discussant, and panel chair, as well as service on the LASA Executive Committee, Central America and Peru Task Force, and Development Committee. Such experiences have enabled me to appreciate the most important elements that have characterized LASA since its founding – inclusiveness, collegial friendships, and vigorous intellectual exchange. Recent leadership has elevated LASA to new levels of financial and intellectual capacity. Among the most important initiatives are increases in foundation support, creation of endowments and funds to support younger scholars travel to and participation in our meetings, the setting up of a long-range development plan to ensure permanent economic stability, and the establishment of country and functional sections to enhance academic exchange within smaller groups. These worthy efforts merit our full support. Were I to be elected to the vice-presidency, I would see my primary role as that of working to maintain and to further develop these initiatives. A major challenge for LASA remains that of reaching out to our Latin American and Caribbean colleagues to increase their participation in our international congresses, especially now that there is a new generation of scholars in the region with fresh research and perspectives on the key issues that concern us all. In my judgment, we need to develop LASA’s capacity to be able to assure these colleagues that we could support all those with worthy proposals and financial need to enable them to attend the meetings. We could also plan to hold more future international congresses in Latin America and the Caribbean to further this objective. The result could only enhance our academic diversity and insight. While clearly a task that cannot be accomplished in two or three years, were I to be honored with your support, I would dedicate my efforts toward advancing this objective. LASA has been a central part of my academic life for many years. I am humbled by the opportunity to serve in a leadership capacity for the organization that has been so important to me for so long. At the same time, I am fully prepared to devote my attention and energy to build upon the solid foundation that has been established, and to enhance LASA’s capacity for an even more distinguished future.

José Antonio Aguilar Rivera was born in Mexico City, Mexico, in 1968. He lives with his wife, Silvia, in Mexico City. He received his B.A. in International Relations from El Colegio de México and his M.A. and Ph.D. in Political Science from the University of Chicago. Since 1995 he teaches political science in the Division of Political Estudios at the Centro de Investigación y Docencia Económicas A.C. (CIDE) in México City. He was the Director of the B.A. Program in Political Science and International Relations at CIDE. Aguilar Rivera is member of the Mexican Sistema Nacional de Investigadores (SNII). His work on nineteenth-century constitutionalism, the history of liberalism and intellectual relations between Mexico and the United States has been published in Spanish, English and French. He is author of: El manto liberal: los poderes de emergencia en México: 1821-1876 (México: Instituto de Investigaciones Jurídicas/UNAM, 2001); En pos de la quimera: reflexiones sobre el experimento constitucional atlántico (México: Fondo de Cultura Económica, 2000); José Antonio Aguilar Rivera and Rafael Rojas, (coords.) El republicanism en Hispanoamérica. Ensayos de historia intelectual y política (México: Fondo de Cultura Económica/CIDE, 2002); and Cartas mexicanas de Alexis de Tocqueville (México: Cal y Arena, 1999), which was awarded the “Premio de crítica literaria y ensayo político Guillermo Roussel Banda” in 1999. On intellectuals in Mexico and the U.S. he has published: The Shadow of Ulysses. Public Intellectual Exchange Across the U.S.-Mexico Border (Lanham, Md.: Lexington Books, 2000). The Spanish version of The Shadow of Ulysses won the “Alfonso Reyes National Award” in 1998. Aguilar Rivera has published essays in the Journal of Latin American Studies, Política y Gobierno, and Cardozo Law Review. His work spans across several disciplines: political science, intellectual history and political theory. Aguilar Rivera is currently working on liberalism and multiculturality. On these subjects he has published: El fin de la raza cósmica: consideraciones sobre el esplendor y decadencia del liberalismo en México (México: Océano, 2001), and a new book comparing arguments on multiculturality in Mexico and the U.S. is forthcoming, (En sonido y la furia: ensayos sobre la persuasión multicultural en México y Estados Unidos, Mexico, Taurus, in press). He has received several national awards and international fellowships: by the Rockefeller Foundation, the U.S.-Mexico Fund for Culture, the Fondo Nacional para la Cultura y las Artes (FONCA). He was appointed as a Fulbright Scholar by the J. William Fulbright Scholarship Board in 2002-3. He currently writes on politics and culture in magazines and newspapers in Mexico. He has published one novel, La fiesta de las turcas (Mexico: Aldus, 2001).

Aguilar Rivera Statement

If elected as a member of the Executive Council of LASA, I would aim to bring the perspective of a Latin American social scientist living and teaching in Mexico to the EC. While thirty percent of LASA members live in Latin America, in the past they have been under represented in the decision-making process of the association. Even when engaged in similar pursuits, scholars from these two parts of the world often speak different intellectual languages. I believe that much can be done to bridge the distance between American scholars and their peers throughout Latin America. LASA Congresses contribute significantly to this aim, but I believe that LASA should encourage other ways to foster academic and cultural exchange. As stated in the Strategic Plan 2003-2006, the Association must provide new spaces for discussion and engagement for intellectual communities across the Americas. I would be involved in devising ways to bring this about. Overcoming national boundaries is one challenge facing LASA. The other is to create permanent networks of scholars within disciplinary boundaries and to facilitate interdisciplinary dialogue. If elected, I would try to strengthen the interdisciplinary approaches already present at LASA. I firmly believe that comparative approaches are able to yield important insights on the cultural, economic and symbolic processes that Latin America and the United States are undergoing. Both areas of the world are at a turning point in their self-understandings. These cultural and symbolic changes have significant consequences. Issues of governance, justice and democratic consolidation are at stake here, as well as the likelihood of peaceful resolution of inter-group conflicts. The new national definitions will also have an impact on the future relationship between Latin Americans and North Americans. New brands of nationalism can be more or less accommodating of differences. In the post-9/11 world it is of the utmost importance to foster intercultural understanding between nations. I believe LASA can and should do more to present the perspectives of Latin America to the U.S. government, mass media and interest groups. We should fight views, such as the one put forth by Samuel Huntington, that claim that Latin America does not belong to Western civilization. Academics and intellectuals, both in Latin America and in the U.S. can do much to spread knowledge about the region in the United States. Thus, I would support the role of LASA as an intellectual “portal” for knowledge dissemination. The Association must reclaim its tradition of involvement with U.S. and hemispheric policy debates that are relevant to our members and the peoples of Latin America.

Jelín Statement

Veo mi incorporación al Comité Ejecutivo de LASA como parte de un proyecto y una política con los que estoy comprometida activamente desde hace muchos años y en muchos ámbitos: crear las condiciones y bregar para que las relaciones entre colegas del “Norte” y del “Sur” sean lo más horizontales posibles. Sabemos que las condiciones y circunstancias de trabajo son extremadamente diferentes: no se pueden comparar las facilidades con que cuentan nuestro/as colegas del Norte con las nuestras —aun en los lugares más privilegiados como México o Brasil. El pluriempleo, la ausencia de presupuestos de investigación, la ausencia de apoyos institucionales, la pobreza de nuestro equipamiento y de nuestras bibliotecas, la constante amenaza del “brain drain”, unidos en muchos casos a dificultades creadas per regímenes dictatoriales y represivos, han estado con nosotros por décadas. Si bien ha habido avances importantes en los desarrollos académicos en América Latina, creo que la brecha Norte/Sur no cesa de aumentar. Estas condiciones de desigualdad financiera y de asimetrías de poder y de saber generan en el campo intelectual dependencias y desequilibrios profundos, que demandan como contrapartida una posición activa y vigilante. LASA es uno de los ámbitos en que debemos trabajar intensa y sistemáticamente para mantener y continuamente recrear las condiciones para un diálogo intelectual igualitario y respetuoso, que permita redefinir los parámetros de la reciprocidad y la horizontalidad, reconociendo y tratando de revertir y superar las desigualdades estructurales. Hay otra dimensión importante en juego en este momento de la historia, anclada en la coyuntura internacional actual y en el papel hegemónico de los Estados Unidos en el mundo. Durante los periodos dictatoriales y de violencia política en América Latina, necesitábamos, buscábamos y encontrábamos la comprensión, la solidaridad y el activismo por parte de muchos de nuestros colegas del Norte. En esta coyuntura actual, las posiciones políticas maniqueas, intransigentes y fundamentalistas, así como los acechos a la condición humana y la integridad académica, han cobrado una dimensión mundial y sus poderosos voceros se escuchan en el Norte y en el Sur. Debemos promover solidaridades y activismo conjuntos, que permitan desarrollar voces intelectuales comprometidas con los derechos fundamentales y con la dignidad humana. LASA no puede quedar fuera o estar al margen de esta tarea.

Brooke Larson is Professor of History at Stony Brook University, where she is closely affiliated with (and the former director of) the Center for Latin American and Caribbean Studies. Her original interests in Latin America grew out of experiences teaching adult literacy and constructing a local school in rural Pérezcuru in the late-1960s. In the early 1970s Larson did her graduate work at Columbia University, specializing in the political economy of colonialism and resistance in Latin America. Thereafter, she taught at Williams College, the New School for Social Research, and Columbia University. In the early 1980s, Larson joined the Social Science Research Council, in charge of the Latin American and Caribbean Program. Working with scholars in Latin American, Europe, and the US, she helped organize collaborative research projects on a wide range of interdisciplinary themes. While working at the SSRC, she also co-coordinated (with Steve Stern) a tripartite project in Andean ethnohistory, which eventually involved dozens of scholars and yielded three conferences and edited volumes. In the early 1990s, Larson served as a member of the SSRC’s Joint Committee on Latin American and Caribbean Studies. She also has served on the editorial boards of several journals, including the American Historical Review, the Hispanic American Historical Review, and The Americas. She was a founding editor of the Colonial Latin American Review and currently serves on its Advisory Board. More recently, she has been active in the New England Council on Latin American Studies.
(board member, 1997-2001; vice-president, 2001-2002; president and NECLAS conference organizer, 2002-2003). Larson has also served as LASA Track Chair for History for the 2000 conference, and she is a member of LASA’s Sections on Rural Studies and Educación y Políticas educativas en América Latina. On the research front, Brooke Larson has been working in various subfields of Andean social history and has been actively involved in the Bolivian scholarly community since the 1970s. Her most recent book is, Trials of Nation Making: Liberalism, Race, and Ethnicity in the Andes, 1810-1910 (Cambridge, 2004). (The Spanish-language edition was published in Peru under the title, Indigéneas, elite, y la formación de las repúblicas andinas [Instituto de Estudios Peruanos/Universidad Católica, 2002]). She also published Cochabamba, 1550-1900. Colonialism and Agrarian Transformation in Bolivia (1st ed., Princeton, 1988; 2nd ed., Duke, 1998), which won the NECLAS 1990 Best Book Award. (Various Spanish-language editions have appeared in Bolivia [1982; 1992; 2000].) Larson is also co-editor (with Olivia Harris and Enrique Tandeter) of Ethnicity, Markets, and Migration. At the Crossroads of History and Anthropology (Duke, 1995). (An earlier, Spanish-language edition was published in Bolivia as La participación indígena en los mercados surandinos, siglos xvi-xx [CERES, 1987].) She is currently writing a book on the cultural politics of indigenous knowledge and schooling under the modernizing Bolivian state in the early 20th century.

Larson Statement

LASA is at a critical turning point. Having become a 5,000-member, genuinely hemispheric organization, it recently has invested effort in clarifying its goals and plotting its strategies, as outlined in its “Strategic Plan.” LASA is also in the midst of reorganizing its Secretariat, completing its search for a new Executive Director, and developing fundraising plans. Clearly, this is an exciting and challenging time to serve on the EC, and I would be honored to do so. In the coming years, I would like to see LASA develop at least three initiatives. First, I would like to see LASA continue its efforts to reach out to under-represented groups, organizations, and countries across Latin America. I am especially keen to see LASA tap into indigenous, Latino, and Afro-Latin organizations, and to bring more Latin American-based scholars/activists into LASA’s leadership positions. From this perspective, it makes sense to hold more LASA conferences in Latin America—especially in under-represented regions. Second, I support LASA’s renewed commitment to the goal of promoting interdisciplinary debates on critical issues of our time. I would like to see LASA make more use of plenary sessions, the Forum, and its web site to stimulate interdisciplinary, North/South dialogues on a set of key social, political, economic, and cultural issues. This is especially important now, given the current political moment and ideological climate in the US. Finally, I would like to see LASA become a useful tool for all of us who teach, at whatever level. Not only could LASA develop a series of booklets on methods, themes, sources, syllabi, etc., but it might also offer various sites for ongoing discussions about interdisciplinary and intercultural approaches to Latin America, the Caribbean, and its various diasporas.

Olivera-Williams Statement

LASA requires innovative strategies to make it a true forum for Latin-Americanists around the world. As LASA 2003 Program Chair, it would be my honor to collaborate further with the Executive Committee to develop and bring such strategies to life. The association’s recently approved mission statement emphasizes its intellectual and scholarly goals as well as its desire to engage the work of activists and other non-academics. The present historical context offers diverse challenges: commercial, financial, migratory and cultural globalization, and the worldwide dissemination of the western philosophy of human rights. Given these challenges, important questions arise:
How might LASA help lead scholars, students and non-academics to a broader understanding of issues like citizenship, languages, education, human rights and ethnic diversity? How might LASA promote cross-disciplinary studies? How might the association facilitate access to scholarship produced in other parts of the world? And how might it strengthen the role of Latin American studies in universities on both sides of the North-South divide? To address these questions, I would first encourage stronger conference support for students and members lacking institutional assistance, as well as for those without access to international networks. This support might take the form of financial help or the encouragement of research and activities in Latin America, done in collaboration with Latin American scholars and activists. In addition, more LASA meetings should be held in Latin American countries to facilitate attendance by members with limited travel funds. Second, as Marysa Navarro has suggested, I would advocate joining forces with the broader community of Latin-Americanists (e.g. members of the International Congress of Americanistas). A rich interchange of scholarly work among different constituencies will surely be rewarding for all involved. The work of the Sections could be used to strengthen these links. Finally, my main interest and most passionate goal would be to find ways in which LASA can continue to erase the North-South divide and build meaningful bridges of scholarship among the programs in Latin American studies in both Americas. LASA should support scholarly exchanges with Latin American universities and academic organizations, thus making possible the dissemination of knowledge and initiatives whose origin is Latin America. In this way, LASA would become an even more vibrant forum where Latin America would be not only an object of study, but also a center for the production of knowledge.

Philip OXHORN has taught in the Political Science Department at McGill University since 1989. His research and teaching focus on civil society and its role in both democratic transitions and the strengthening of new democracies in Latin America. In addition to numerous articles in both Spanish and English, he is the author of Organizing Civil Society: The Popular Sectors and the Struggle for Democracy in Chile (Penn State, 1995). He is also co-editor of Decentralization, Civil Society, and Democratic Governance: Comparative Perspectives from Latin America, Africa, and Asia (with Joseph S. Tulchin, and Andrew D. Selee, Woodrow Wilson Center Press/the Johns Hopkins University Press, forthcoming June 2004); What Kind of Democracy? What Kind of Market? Latin America in the Age of Neoliberalism (with G. Ductanzeiler Penn State, 1998); and Markets and Democracy in Latin America: Conflict or Convergence? (with P. Sturr, (Lynne Rienner, 1999). He is currently completing a book-length manuscript, Sustaining Civil Society: Economic Change, Democracy and the Social Construction of Citizenship in Latin America. Based on extensive field work in Bolivia, Chile and Mexico, the book examines the relationship between the strength of civil society and the quality of democratic rule in the context of extensive market liberalization over the past quarter century. He was the Program Chair for the 2001 LASA Congress held in Washington, DC, at which time he was also an ex-officio member of the Executive Committee. In the past, he has conducted research and worked closely with the Canadian Foundation for the Americas (FOCAL), the Ford Foundation, the Inter-American Development Bank, the International Development Research Centre, the MacArthur Foundation and the Woodrow Wilson International Center for Scholars. He currently is a member of the Editorial Board for Latin American Politics and Society, the International Advisory Committee of the Facultad Latinoamericana de Ciencias Sociales (FLACSO), Dominican Republic, and the Group of Regional Experts on Diversity and Integration for Catalyst, a nonprofit research and advisory organization working to advance women in business based in New York. He has been invited to lecture and participate in a variety of conferences throughout the Americas. At McGill, he is currently a member of the Board of Directors of the McGill Centre for Teaching and Research on Women and a member of the Latin American and Caribbean Studies Program Advisory Committee. He recently completed a term as Associate Dean, Graduate and Postdoctoral Studies.

Oxhorn Statement

Ever since my first LASA Congress, I have increasingly appreciated the importance of an organization like LASA for creating the kind of professional environment that is essential to meeting the challenges of today's world. As a truly multidisciplinary association that brings together people from all over the world based on their shared interests in Latin America, it is a model of an open, tolerant organization that often plays an important advocacy role on behalf of those who have suffered most from the absence of open and tolerant political systems. Its congresses are occasions where people can feel free to present their work on their own terms, meet new people and reacquaint themselves with old friends who they may only see every 18 months. As the 2001 Congress Program Chair, I was able to experience firsthand the inner-workings of LASA. New efforts were made to reach out to LASA's Sections, which were growing in size and seeking to further define their role within an organization that had a long history without their presence. I also helped lay the foundations for the modernization of the Congress organization, a task that I continued to be engaged in when my term as Program Chair ended, beginning with the development of a state-of-the-art database that will allow for a smoother and more efficient congress. Those efforts culminated with electronic submissions for the 2004 Congress. As an ex-officio member of the Executive Committee, I gained important experience regarding the challenges LASA faced as it tried to reach out to new and younger groups, as well as diversify its finances and complete a transition with the then pending retirement of its Executive Director. It was during this period that I started working closely with the newly appointed Executive Director, Milagros Pereyra. My experiences conducting research throughout Latin America from a multidisciplinary perspective, working with a variety of researchers, institutions and civil society groups, have prepared me well to help guide an organization as large and encompassing as LASA, as did my recent experience as Associate Dean of Graduate and Postdoctoral Studies at McGill, where I was responsible for dealing with challenges emerging in all of McGill's 21 Faculties. It would be an honor and a privilege for me to be able to help...
LASA continue to expand upon and enrich its unique role as a member of the Executive Committee.

Lynn Stephen is currently Distinguished Professor and Chair of the Department of Anthropology at the University of Oregon where she is also affiliated with the programs in Women’s and Gender Studies, Latin American Studies, and Ethnic Studies. From 1987 to 1998, she taught at Northeastern University where she was a co-founder (in 1992) and director (1995-1997) of the program in Latino, Latin, and American Studies. While living in Boston, she served on the Executive Board of the New England Council on Latin American Studies from 1994-1996. She was the Gender Section Program Co-Chair for LASA in 1997, served as the Chair of the LASA/Ofxam America Martin Diskin Memorial Lectureship nomination committee in 2001, served as a councilor for the Society for Latin American Anthropology from 1995-1997, and is currently on the editorial boards of The Journal of Latin American Anthropology and Critique of Anthropology. She is a board member of Amigos de los Sobrevivientes de Tortura y Violencia Política and an Advisory Board Member of Cultural Survival. Her research and publications have centered on the intersection of culture and politics. She has a particular interest in the ways that political identities articulate with ethnicity, gender, class, and nationalism in relation to local, regional, and national histories, cultural politics, and systems of governance in Latin America. During the past five years she has added the dimension of migration to her research. She is the author of four books including Zapotec Women (1991, published in Spanish in 1997); Hear My Testimony: Maria Teresa Tula, Human Rights Activist of El Salvador (1994, published in Spanish in 1996); Women and Social Movements in Latin America: Power From Below (1997); and Zapata Lives!: Histories and Cultural Politics in Southern Mexico (2002, currently in the process of being translated and published in Spanish). With James Dow, she is the co-editor of Class, Politics, and Popular Religion in Mexico and Central America (1990). She is co-editor with Matt Gutmann, Felix Matos Rodriguez, and Pat Zavella of Perspectives on Las Américas: A Reader in Culture, History, and Representation (2002). Her books in progress include Zapotec Women in the Global Economy (under contract to Duke University Press); Cultural Difference and Globalization: Transnational Mexican Indigenous Migrants (under contract with Duke University Press); Dissident Women: Gender and Cultural Politics in Chiapas (co-edited with Aida Hernández Castillo and Shannon Speed and under contract with University of Texas Press). She has published a wide range of articles and book chapters in English, Spanish, and Portuguese. She is the recipient of fellowships from the National Endowment for Humanities, the Center for U.S.-Mexican Studies, the Radcliffe Institute for Advanced Studies, as well as research grants from the National Science Foundation, the Wenner-Gren Foundation for Anthropological Research, and the Inter-American Foundation. She has a strong commitment to collaborative research and in projects that produce findings that are accessible to the wider public. She has produced a video, Mayordomía: Ritual, Gender, and Cultural Identity in a Zapotec Community, Winner of the Merit Award, Latin American Studies Association Film Festival, 1992, as well as a web site, and publications such as The Story of PCUN and the Farmworker Movement done in collaboration with Oregon’s only farmworker union (Pineros y Campeños Unidos del Noroeste) and distributed free to libraries and schools throughout the state. She is currently working on a two projects: (1) immigration and Mexican farmworkers in Oregon and (2) the role of cooperatives and global marketing on the political, labor, and gender identities of Zapotec women in southern Mexico.

Stephen Statement

I am honored by the opportunity to serve LASA, which for me has been a very important space in developing as a scholar, teacher, and public intellectual. I am particularly heartened by the direction LASA is taking to bring together Latino, Latin American, and Caribbean Studies in creative ways. I applaud and will continue efforts to further incorporate Latin-American-based scholars and activists into the organization. In addition, I will work to further integrate more Latino scholars and activists into the organization as well. In order to produce research, delegations, and reports that critically address policy and politics in the Americas, we all benefit by bringing together a wide range of scholars, professionals, and activists and benefitting from their expertise and often transnational experience. I am particularly heartened as well by the development of the sections in LASA and their increasing presence in the Association. LASA has provided very important spaces for Queer scholars in particular who often have no institutionalized forums in their home countries. I will work to support the efforts of the sections as they develop. There are three particular current issues I will bring to the Executive Council. First, current debates on immigration policies and security in the U.S. are themes that LASA must address. Second, I will be particularly vigilant for ways that LASA can actively defend the autonomy of area studies programs as they come under increasing scrutiny by the U.S. government. Third, I will work to ensure that more of our meetings take place in Latin America as that is necessary to develop more equitable relations between all of the members of LASA as well as stronger links to Latin American universities and other institutions.

ELECTRONIC VOTE WILL BE AVAILABLE ON-LINE
FROM MAY 15, TO JULY 1, 2004.

LASA VOLUNTARY SUPPORT

We have good news to share! First of all, the Association has two new Life Members, Peter Ward and Arturo Arias. Peter is the Editor of the Latin American Research Review (LARR), a past Congress program chair, and a current member of the Executive Council (EC). Arturo is the past president of LASA and currently serves in that role as a member of the EC. We are extremely grateful to them for their support of the Endowment Fund through a Life Membership.

Thanks to member and friend generosity, the LASA Travel and Student Funds continue to grow for LASA2004. At the recent meeting of the EC we were able to report that the Travel Fund stands at $9192 and the Student Fund at $3076. We hope to provide $10,000 through the Travel Fund and at least $4000 to student travelers for the October Congress. If you have not already done so, we encourage you to make a contribution to either fund as soon as possible. Contributors of at least $100 to either fund will receive a LASA mug.

Contributors to the LASA Travel Fund since our last report include:

PROPOSED CHANGES TO LASA BY-LAWS

At its meeting on February 7, 2004, the LASA Executive Council approved the following proposed change in the By-Laws of the Association:

Item 7. under Article VI. "Proposals intended as official LASA resolutions must be sponsored by at least thirty LASA members in good standing and received by the LASA Secretariat thirty days prior to the beginning of each Congress. Sponsors may support a proposal by signed mail, signed fax, or by electronic communication to the Secretariat which indicates the name and address of the sponsor. All proposed resolutions shall be reviewed by a Subcommittee on Resolutions, consisting of the LASA Vice President and two other members of the Executive Council appointed by the LASA President. This Subcommittee may seek advisory opinions from all sources it deems appropriate, and may recommend revisions. The Subcommittee shall report its findings to the full Executive Council and recommend action to be taken. All proposed resolutions approved by a two-thirds majority vote of the Executive Council shall be read at the Business Meeting. Discussion of each proposed resolution may take place, but attendees at the Business meeting shall not vote on the proposed resolution. Amendments to resolutions may be presented at the LASA Business Meeting, and if accepted as a friendly amendment by a duly empowered person present at the meeting, the resolution as amended will be sent out for a vote to the membership. If not accepted, the resolution will be sent out for vote in its original form. All proposed resolutions shall be automatically emailed for electronic voting to each individual who is a member during the year in which the Congress is held, no later than 15 days after the close of the Business Meeting. Votes must be received within sixty days of receipt of the email transmission. The results of the vote shall be posted in the subsequent issue of the LASA Forum and posted on the LASA Internet site.

Amendments proposed by the Executive Council go into effect 90 days after the LASA membership is notified provided that no more than 100 persons object in writing to the Executive Director within the interim period. Objections can be directed to LASA Executive Director, LASA, 946 William Pitt Union, University of Pittsburgh, Pittsburgh PA 15260. E-mail <lassa@pitt.edu>. The cutoff date for receipt of objections to the above proposed change is August 15, 2004.

SECTION NEWS

Rural Studies Section Plans Field Trip to Moapa Valley

The Rural Studies Section of LASA is hosting a field trip for its members on Wednesday, October 6, in conjunction with the LASA2004 Congress in Las Vegas. The title of the field trip is "The Contest for Water and its Implications for Rural Areas: The Moapa Valley and its People and Survival Strategies." The trip was discussed in the last meeting of the section as a means to encourage familiarity with how the rural communities have been organized and to learn more of their pre-Colombian history. The trip is being financed by the section itself, although participants are asked to provide ten dollars for lunch. The University of Nevada Extension Service and the North Regional Center for Rural Development are acknowledged for their support of the project. Rural Studies Section members may contact Cornelia Flora at <cflora@iastate.edu> for more information or to indicate their desire to participate.

Labor Studies Section Mini-Conference

The Labor Studies section will hold a mini-conference one day prior to LASA 2004, titled, "Globalization and Labor in Latin America: Assessing the State of the Field and Proposing a New Research Agenda" supported by the Ford-LASA Special Projects Fund. The event examines how globalization has reconfigured work, class identities, gender relations and labor politics in the region, and will be open to members of the section. The mini-conference will provide travel funding to participating Latin American experts and organizers hope to publish an edited volume based on the session's proceedings. A proposed LASA featured session with the same title, if approved, will report on the results of the meeting to all LASA membership. Section members are grateful for Ford-LASA support and look forward to share the strengths of our interest area with the wider LASA membership.
PERSONAL AND PROFESSIONAL NOTES

Cultural Studies in the Curriculum: Teaching in Latin America edited by LASA members Danny J. Anderson and Jill S. Kuhnheim has recently been published by the Modern Language Association of America. The nine essays in this volume probe the tension and interdependence between the literary and the cultural, and they demonstrate the relevance of cultural studies to a new generation of language learners in an era of globalization.

The University of Pittsburgh Press has published Politics in the Andes: Identity, Conflict, Reform, edited by LASA members Joe-Marie Burt and Philip Mauceri. Among the contributing authors are LASA members Joe-Marie Burt, Philip Mauceri, Xavier Albo, Liisa L. North, and Margarita Lopez-Mayo. In Cynthia McClintock’s words, this book “examines the intense challenges to democratization in the five Andean nations - ethnic and regional cleavages, poverty, and traditions of political violence that have been exacerbated amid the ‘War on Drugs’”

The Cuba Reader. History, Culture, Politics co-edited by LASA members Aviva Chomsky, Barry Carr and Maria Smorkaloff, has just been published by Duke University Press. According to LASA member Louis Perez Jr., “The book offers a splendid overview of the Cuban experience, past and present, through a dazzling array of points of view.”

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

The Department of Puerto Rican and Hispanic Caribbean Studies of Rutgers University in New Brunswick, New Jersey, is seeking applications for a tenured appointment at the rank of associate professor or professor to serve as Chair of the Department during its planned restructuring and expansion. We are particularly interested in senior candidates with outstanding records of scholarship and leadership who can bring vision and knowledge of the complex trajectories and political contexts of Puerto Rican, Hispanic Caribbean, and Latino Studies as interdisciplinary fields. The Department welcomes applications from scholars in the various disciplines of the humanities and social sciences. Applicants should also have the necessary administrative skills to lead the Department through a process of expansion that will include multiple hires and a widening of the curriculum in the area of Latino Studies. Applications should include a C.V., three letters of recommendation, and a sample of scholarly publications. All correspondence should be sent to:

Chair of Search Committee
Department of Puerto Rican and Hispanic Caribbean Studies
Rutgers University
53 Avenue E
Piscataway, NJ 08854

Review of applications will begin immediately and continue until positions are filled.

The Office of Interdisciplinary Studies, College of Arts and Sciences at the University of Miami is accepting applications for 2 post-doctoral positions: one in Judaic Studies and one in Latin American Studies. Persons with a Ph.D. in any field related to Judaic Studies or Latin American Studies are encouraged to apply. Applicants must have a commitment to interdisciplinary studies with an interest in exploring interdisciplinary methodologies, proposing innovative courses and pursuing creative research endeavors. Post-Doctoral Associates will teach 3 courses per year which will include a significant component of undergraduate research; participate in Interdisciplinary Studies Colloquia; become involved in the general development of the programs; and possibly supervise undergraduate independent study. They will be expected to utilize their time at the university to advance their individual research projects. The award will be for a 2-year term, made up of 12-month appointments. Salary and benefits are competitive. Candidates must have received their doctoral degree in a related field within the past 3 years or have completed all requirements for the degree no later than July 1, 2004. The proposed start date is August 1, 2004. Applicants should send an application letter clearly identifying their proposed research, a curriculum vitae, 3 letters of reference, a writing sample, and a proposal for an intermediate or upper-level topics course including a description and reading list. Send application materials to:

The Department of World Arts and Cultures at the University of California/Los Angeles invites applications for a tenure-track, open-rank position focused on theories of globalization and transnationalism, and/or diaspora and transmigratory studies in relation to performance and/or expressive culture. The applicant's research should engage with globalization as it interacts with issues such as identity and corporeality, as it intersects social categories of gender, class, race, and/or ethnicity, and as it is produced or contested by contemporary performance (as broadly conceived). Responsibilities of the position will include active pursuit of a program of research, publication, and/or creative work; graduate and undergraduate teaching and advising; and service in the Department of World Arts and Cultures. The successful candidate will contribute to the undergraduate curriculum in Cultural Studies, the graduate curriculum in Culture and Performance and will participate in the interdisciplinary, comparative, and theoretical dialogues that define the intellectual vitality of the Department of World Arts and Cultures. The position is open to both scholars and artist-scholars. A Ph.D. or other terminal degree is preferred. We invite applications from candidates who are interested in connecting with other fields and disciplines and are strongly committed to research. Theoretical and geographical interests are open. Level of appointment and salary will be determined by the candidate’s qualifications and professional experience. A letter of application (which should include a brief narrative about the applicant’s research and teaching interests), C.V., sample publication and/or documentation of creative work, and names, phone numbers, and email addresses of three references should be sent to:

Chair, Global Studies Search Committee
UCLA - Department of World Arts and Cultures
P.O. Box 951608
Los Angeles, CA 90095-1608
Deadline: April 5, 2004 or until filled.

The Center for Latin American Studies at the University of Arizona, a National Resource Center with 4 core members and over 120 affiliated faculty, announces a search for a permanent Director. The University has set as minimum requirements that the candidate be a senior scholar with a PhD in a related field and a Latin American specialty in one of the social sciences or humanities, with successful administrative and grant writing experience. The department is seeking an individual who is able to work with diverse students and colleagues, and who has experience with a variety of teaching methods and curricular perspectives. Fluency in Spanish or Portuguese required. The successful candidate will be expected to build on the established multidisciplinary programs on campus and in Latin America. Desirable experience includes successfully applying for and administering a Title VI Program. The position has the strong support of the deans of both the colleges of Social and Behavioral Sciences and the Humanities, and candidates from both areas are encouraged to apply. The University is committed to the creation of a diverse administration and faculty, and persons of under-represented groups are urged to submit applications. The successful candidate can begin the position as early as January, 2005. Salary and benefits will be competitive. Detailed information on the Center, its core and affiliated faculty, its undergraduate and graduate programs, and its outreach activities is available online at http://las.arizona.edu.

Please complete the application for job # 30109 at www.hr.arizona.edu. Be prepared to attach a letter of application and curriculum vitae that includes a list of scholarly publications and the names of at least three references. Consideration of candidates will begin April 15, 2004 and continue until the position is filled.

The Third International Caribbean Conference in Brazil will take place in Goiânia, Brazil, between October 20th and 24th. The Conference is a joint undertaking by Centro de Estudos do Caribe no Brasil (Centre for Caribbean Studies in Brazil) of Universidade Federal de Goiás, Secretaria de Ciências Tecnologia do Estado de Goiás (Department for Science and Technology of Goiás State), the History Graduate School and History Department of Universidade Federal de Goiás, Universidade Católica de Goiás, History Graduate School of Universidade de Brasília, Espace Nouveaux Mondes (FLASH, Université de La Rochelle, France), Instituto de Historia de Michoacán, Mexico, and Universidad de Gran Canaria in Spain. The primary purpose of the conference is as in the previous conferences organised by CECAB, to strive towards bringing Brazil closer to (Afro-) Caribbean, African, and Asian cultures. A secondary aim is to contribute to the interdisciplinary debate in various research fields, particularly those related to history and anthropology.

The Institute for Policy Studies invites interested students, activists and other researchers to apply for the 2004 Melman fellowship to underwrite research and writing in the fields of demilitarization and workplace democracy. The Institute for Policy Studies is pleased to sponsor the Seymour Melman Fellowship Program. This year we will be selecting one Fellow to receive a stipend of $5,000. Over the course of the year, this Melman Fellow will be invited to spend some time at IPS and, when appropriate, will be mentored by an IPS Fellow/project directors in completing her/his project. Applicants are invited to submit a 2-3 page proposal outlining a research and writing project that relates to some aspect of either demilitarization or workplace democracy (or both). The proposal should be accompanied by a resume and two references with phone numbers. Direct inquiries and send proposals to:

The Woodrow Wilson International Center for Scholars announces the opening of its 2005-2006 Fellowship competition. The Center awards approximately 20-25 academic year residential fellowships to individuals from any country with outstanding project proposals on national and/or international issues. Projects should have relevance to the world of public policy or provide the historical and/or cultural framework to illumine policy issues of contemporary importance. Applicants must hold a doctorate or have equivalent professional experience. Fellows are provided stipends which include round trip travel, private offices, access to the Library of Congress, Windows-based personal computers, and research assistants. For more information and application guidelines please contact the Center at:

MEMBERSHIP RATES FOR YEAR 2004 AND FOR THE THREE-YEAR OPTION

LASA is offering a three-year membership option for the period 2004 to 2006. If you elect the three-year option, protecting you against any dues raises in 2005 and 2006, your membership fee is three times the fee for the single-year rate. Note that this three-year option does not apply to student membership, which already has a limit of five years, nor does it apply to publications, as their rates are subject to change each year. Please check only one of the following:

- Payment for calendar year 2004 only
- Payment for the three-year period 2004 to 2006
